TINLEY TRUCK DRIVER IN 2ND CRASH IN WEEK

Adolph Schultz, a driver for the Tinley Park Bakery who crashed into a truck belonging to Conrad Bettenhausen last Tuesday night in which the driver of the Bettenhausen truck was quite seriously injured, was released on a $1,000 bond last week and his trial was set for Wednesday of this week.

Tuesday night of this week, just a week after he figured in the above mentioned crash, he ran into a Chevrolet sedan on Cicero avenue in Alsip almost in front of the police station. The automobile and the bakery truck were very badly damaged. The driver of the automobile was slightly injured and Schultz was cut by broken glass. He was again arrested and placed in the county jail.

He has been charged with reckless driving it is reported.

Tinley Woman's Club Holds An Interesting Meeting

The second meeting of the Tinley Park Woman's Club was held Wednesday November 17 in the Methodist church. At 11 a. m. the Better Speech Class enjoyed their usual lesson under the direction of Mrs. Walter Kester who has proven to be a very capable and efficient teacher.

Following the class instruction, Mrs. John Swisher gave a short talk on contemporary poetry and read selections from the works of five poets as follows:

Edgar Guest—1881. Writer of humorous and serious verse. Self styled "Poet of the Plain People." Poems enjoyed because of his simple treatment of joys and sorrows of every day life. Reverence for home, God, America and the inevitable fruits of honesty and industry are his themes. Born in England. Emigrated to the United States at the age of ten with his parents. Educated in Detroit, Michigan. His poetry is syndicated in newspapers thruout the United States.

Carl Sandburg—1878. An American poet of the middle west; biographer and collector of folk songs. Born at Galesburg, Ill. His poems which first achieved recognition in 1914 are among the few successful interpretations of the modern industrial metropolis, and the ceaseless activity of the middle west and its workers. Characterized by their ruggedness and independence of conventional poetic forms. It was his "Chicago Poems" that brought him to the front.

Robert Frost—1875. Robert Frost's poetry is termed the only true "Bucolic poetry" of today, by many writers. His lyrical poems have been less successful than his narrative poems. He is not a singing lyricist. However one lyric, at least will defy mortality—"The Road Not Taken." Mr. Frost is New England.

Mrs. Swisher read: "Oh Love, that Wilt Not Let Me Go," written by George Matheson, in solace of a love lost because he was going blind. This poem written in June, 1882, has been put to music and is now used as a hymn; and "In The Garden Of The Lord" written by the most famous of our blind, who was rendered dumb at an early age by the loss of both sight and hearing. Miss Keller is well known as a poet and author, but most of all as one whose physical limitations could not limit her soul.

Midlothian Wants New Village Hall

Officials of Midlothian are making plans for the election of a village hall, according to Richard White, president of the board of trustees. The proposed structure would house all the village offices, departments and apparatus. At the present time fire equipment is stored in a garage, the police magistrate holds court in his place of business and a meeting place for the council is rented.

Upon suggestion of President White, the board is making a survey to see if the village is financially able to erect a building; also if federal aid can be obtained. Village engineers and the city attorney are being consulted on the project.

Letter To Editor

Frankfort, Ill.—In regards to the article in the News-Bulletin as to how the Honorable Senator Barr and his friend Mr. Cooper obtained the safety signs at the intersection of Wolf road and Route 6, is really a farce.

Mr. Cooper could have called Mr. Ludwig of Orland Park and this would have been appreciated by the Highway Division.

Mr. Cooper knows that the Primaries are coming and he must keep the name Barr before the public even though it is in a way that is laughable.

Orland PTA Plans Community Christmas Party

Thursday evening the regular P. T. A. meeting was held. At this time plans for a community Xmas party were begun. Mrs. Lawrence Utthe and Mrs. Howard Hewson assisted by Mrs. Estand will arrange program and report at Derember meeting. If any one has help to offer and suggestions, won't you please do so?

Derember 3rd, P. T. A. will sponsor a card and bunco party at the school. Mrs. Walter Kramer, Mrs. George Steinhagen and Mrs. Walter Yunker will assist the ways and means chairman, Mrs. W. McAleer. The P. T. A. have voted to buy science books to be used by children in the grades 1 to 8. This is one project we have under taken. These books were purchased not as a library book but are actual every-day study books.

The room prize award was won by Miss Schmaedeke. After meeting adjourned the program chairman had an evening of dancing for all friends. At this time we noticed our high school boys and girls were present. We hope they will again help the parents to have another enjoyable evening soon.

Included in program was serving of doughnuts and coffee by chairman, which put a finish to a very profitable and enjoyable evening.

Joliet Taverns To Be Cut 90 per cent

Officials of Joliet expect the number of taverns in the city to drop from 143 to fifteen as the result of the passage recently of an ordinance raising the license from $500 to $1,000 a year.

Despite the protest by members of the Illinois Liquor Dealers' Association, the city council, by a vote of 3 to 2, raised the license fee for class "B" taverns to $1,000 and to $1,200 for taverns which have entertainments. The new law also limits taverns to one for each 420 residents.

Proponents of the newly passed ordinance, which was fostered by the Will County ministerial organization, say that with the new restriction clause and operation policy a better class of taverns will be had. Indications that only fifteen of the present 143 saloons would seek to operate in Joliet under the new ordinance came as a surprise to all. It was assumed, it was said, that a heavy drop would take place, but not one so drastic.

Because all territory in Will County outside of incorporated villages has a $400 saloon license fee, leaders of the Joliet movement were seeking to get county officials to raise the fee to correspond closely with the new Joliet law.

Skidding Auto Ditches Truck

The slippery roads of last week caused quite a number of autos skidding into the ditch. August Werner, Mokena meat dealer, figured in a minor accident on Lincoln highway near the Woodcock farm east of New Lenox. A car bearing an Indiana license skidded as it was passing Mr. Werner's truck and the rear end swung into the latter's truck, causing it to leave the highway and run into a nearby field. The truck was slightly damaged and the Indiana autoist agreed to pay for the damages. No one was hurt.

Last Thursday night two Nash cars in transit were ditched at the four-corners north of Frankfort when the lead car skidded into ditch. No one was injured. The Larson Garage wrecker pulled the car out of the ditch.

ORLAND FARMER RAISES MANY TURKEY DINNERS

Farmers say the hardest birds to raise are turkeys. But John Hostert of Orland Township seems to have solved the trick. More than 100 big Thanksgiving dinners strutting around his farm the past few weeks gobbling and growing fat. Hostert watched them with pride, knowing that before many days all of them would be served up brown and succulent on Chicago tables.

PROVES PROFITABLE

For many years Hostert farm has been one of the few in the South-west district to raise turkeys. "It's a lot of trouble," he said, "but around Thanksgiving and Christmas it's profitable, though perhaps not so much so as a few years ago."

He began raising gobblers when scores of city friends who visit his farm demanded Thanksgiving and Christmas turkeys raised in the vicinity.

"When they see the live gobbler and watch me behead it, they know they're eating a fresh Thanksgiving bird," Hostert said.

Like most other turkey raisers, Hostert allows his flock of turkeys to roam around the farm. He thinks the birds that are free are much more contented than those in cages, even if they don't get quite as fat.

Although he has made a thorough study of raising turkeys, Hostert said there is one branch he has not been able to master, and that is in catching the birds.

SYNOPSIS

Joyce Sewell, on the eve of her twentieth birthday, rebels at her lot, dependent on her detested stepmother, Irma, and full of tragic memories of her mother's murder twelve years before and her father's death six months ago. Irma calls in Helm Blackadder, an admirer, to help her persuade Joyce to marry rich, young Michael Kirkpatrick.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Joyce started toward a chair but stopped. "No; if we are going to have one of our reasonable talks, I'd rather stand."

"That means I'll have to stand too," said Blackadder, sensing he faced a wise and clever fighter. "It doesn't leave me a choice, does it?"

"Not if you feel you have to stay." "Joyce!" cried Mrs. Sewell sharply. "How can you be rude to Mr. Blackadder, a man twice your age and my oldest friend?"

"I wasn't trying to be rude," said Joyce coolly. "I was wondering why he's here."

"I've told you. Because he's my oldest and almost my only friend. We were boy and girl together and if I can't turn to him in my trouble I can appeal to nobody."

"Your trouble!" exclaimed Joyce. "If you'd only leave me alone, let me go my own way, you wouldn't have a thing in the world to worry about."

"That's just it—I can't. I can't stand aside and watch you ruin your life. It wouldn't be right. I can tell you to your face, here before Mr. Blackadder, if you don't take Michael Kirkpatrick while you still have the chance you'll regret it the rest of your life."

"So it's narrowed down to Mike, has it?" said Joyce. "How did you come to pick on him?"

As if she were resigning the floor Mrs. Sewell made a gesture toward Blackadder. Strangely uneasy he straightened and braced his elbows on the mantel. He leveled his eyes at her, taking her measure.

"Let's see if I can talk your language. Do you mind listening till we find out?"

"No; I'll listen."

"You're young, Joyce, and you're up against a tough situation. You don't like your stepmother. Well, there's nothing we can do about that. Likes and dislikes don't go by favor or obligation; they hang on two Spanish words, easy to understand, hard to translate—simpatica and antipatica. Right?"

"Yes," said Joyce, amazed at the boldness of his attack and startled by his idiomatic use of a language she thought she alone in Elsinboro knew.

"The yoke of living on Irma has been galling you till all you can think of is escape. The first thing you picked on was to be a teacher, but you found out it isn't enough to know your subject—you've got to have a string of silly letters after your name. So you thought you'd be a stenographer and look for a firm engaged in foreign trade. Unfortunately, you're unfitted for business. You'd be an absolute flop."

"Why?"

"Because you're emotional and a thoroughbred; the first time you found yourself the mechanical link in a gyp game you'd walk out."

"Then what's left?" asked Joyce dimly as much of herself as of him.

"We're coming to that," said Blackadder sharply. Perceiving he had shaken her, his head moved forward between his shoulders and his eyes grew beady. "You don't like Irma, but you've lived on her since you were eight years old. She's given you everything you've had—shelter, food, raiment and care—and you've never paid for any of it in love or in cash."

"Oh!" gasped Joyce, wincing under the sting of a lash she had used on herself again and again. "How could I? You know I have nothing—nothing!"

"That's not so," said Blackadder, shooting the words at her. "You have plenty if you take it to the right market. Let's get down to bed-rock. Do you dislike Mike any more than you do your stepmother? Do you?"

"No!" said Joyce.

"Then why not live on him for a while where you can pay ten for one?"

Watching her sink into a chair as if he had knocked her knees from under he felt a curious elation. He had beaten her, it had been a hard fight, but he had won out.

"This way out that Helm suggests—" said Mrs. Sewell—"this thing I've been begging you to do—you don't think it's for me, do you? It's for you—for your own good. We're older than you are, we can see back as well as ahead. Can't you believe us? Can't you see it's your best chance for happiness?"

"Happiness!" breathed Joyce. "I suppose every girl has her dream of happiness." Then her low voice began to grow in volume and intensity. "I know I have mine and it's a dream of giving, not taking. I don't mean giving things—money, food, clothes—because love doesn't grow out of things. Even if you try your best to make it, it doesn't, it won't. I mean giving something that's inside you, that aches to be given and—"

"I know, dear," interrupted Mrs. Sewell soothingly, "but believe me, you'll feel all that if you'll only just—"

"Oh, you're horrible!" cried Joyce desperately. "I wish I hadn't told you! Do you think I'm blind? You want to be rid of me—both of you. All right. I give in. I promise. If it isn't Mike it will be something else, some other way. I promise." She was gone from the room before either of them could answer.

CHAPTER II

Her departure left Blackadder breathless and somewhat confused. He continued to stand with his back to the mantel, staring at her as if her hurrying figure were still in sight, filling his eyes. And he had thought she was licked! He became aware of Irma's murmuring voice.

"You were wonderful, Helm, but I knew you would be, I was sure of it. The minute I thought of you the load began to lift off my shoulders and now, whatever happens, it's gone. But let's forget trouble. I can't tell you what it means to me to see you standing there like a pillar giving sense and reason to everything in the room, including me."

She smiled up at him expectantly. His lips parted but it was ordained the maid should enter then.

"It's Mr. Kirkpatrick, ma'am."

The young man entered, flamboyant as to hair, complexion, manner and clothes. "Michael, you know Mr. Blackadder, don't you?"

"Sure thing," said Mike, holding out his hand.

Blackadder beat him to the grip and almost crushed his knuckles, then let go too quickly for a comeback. Mrs. Sewell came to the rescue.

"You can go right up, Michael. You'll find Joyce in her sitting room. I—I wish you luck."

Something in the manner of her final words made Kirkpatrick glance at her curiously. He nodded and started for the back where a side staircase supplemented the one in the main hall. Arriving at Joyce's door he knocked softly, pretended he heard an answering call, turned the knob and stepped in. Joyce was on her knees before the petaca, in the act of fitting a clumsy key into the homestead lock.

"Where did you find the Ellis island trunk?" he asked jovially.

She turned her head and stared up at him out of unbelieving eyes. "It was my father's," she answered automatically. Then she rose, holding tight to the key, and stood at her full height. "What are you doing here?" she demanded. "Who told you you could come in?"

He backed against the door until the latch clicked shut. "You did. I knocked and I thought I heard you say, 'Come in.'"

"You were mistaken. Please go."

"Aw, get off the horse, Joyce. Can't you talk from the floor for once in your life?"

Abruptly her frown deepened. "Did they send for you?"

"Who?"

"Mr. Blackadder and my stepmother."

"They did not; I brought myself."

"Then take yourself away."

"What's the rush, Joyce, now I'm here? Listen, let's have a showdown. I've told you over and over again I can give you a lot of things and so can you me, but I've done all the crawling I'm going to do. Besides, I've just had a tip. I may not know books like some of your rah-rah friends, but I can see out of both eyes. So I'm asking you for the last time—will you marry me or won't you?"

"I won't, now or ever."

He stepped toward her, his fingers itching but his eyes frightened and wet. Abruptly he stopped. Why? He didn't know. She had not moved. She stood with the big key held tightly in her right hand as though it were a dagger. Pressed against her dark dress her fist seemed small and white yet powerful. She had brought him to a halt with only a look—a look of loathing beyond words. He turned, tore open the door and rushed from the room.

Joyce knelt on the floor, then bent over the little rawhide trunk, turned the key and raised the lid. A pungent odor of age-old paper, rust, leather and rotting tape greeted her nostrils.

Her father's last years had left her memory of a weakling, a lovable weakling. Now, immersed in his fervent letters and shocked by the impersonal frigidity of the replies they had evoked, she saw him in his true proportions as a martyr burned at the stake. Slowly, day after day, month after month, yet uttering no cry. Unshed tears stung in her eyes, blinding her. Anger at injustice mounted into rage and rage into the incandescent heat that tempers steel to a cutting edge. He had left no son to avenge his wrongs—only a girl. She dug her nails into the palms of her hands. Some day, somehow, she would find a way. Again there came a knock at her door, a hesitant knock quite unlike her stepmother's.

"Who is it?" she whispered hoarsely.

"It's me, Miss Joyce," answered the maid's voice. "I've brought you a letter and a bit of supper."

"Thanks, Ellen, I don't want a thing to eat. Please slip the letter under the door."

It was long and without a stamp, probably a circular. Her inclination was to let it lie, but abruptly she was seized by its similarity to a dozen envelopes in the petaca, all bearing the penalty-for-private-use formula. A pale yellow slip fluttered to the floor as she tore open the official envelope and unfolded the letter within. She read it at a glance, then again slowly, word by word: "At the instance of the Mexican ambassador, who has deposited the necessary funds, I beg to enclose a warrant on the Treasury of the United States for $10,000, compensation in full for the death of Ann Burden Sewell. Your endorsement will be sufficient receipt."

She caught up the pale yellow slip. Sitting cross-legged she stared and stared at it, for it looked like no check she had ever seen. Yet its purport was unmistakable—the Treasury of the United States held $10,000 at her disposal. The finger of fate was upon her. If this amazing windfall had come an hour sooner she might have signed it over to her stepmother, flung it at her with actual joy, in payment for back rent and board. But not now—no, not now. She put her arms around the petaca, pressed her cheek against its arabesques of brass tacks and bowed her head as if she were making a vow. Presently she went to bed, but lay awake for a long time, dreaming, planning, then floating off into a restful haze midway between sleep and consciousness.

In the morning she was up early. She drank her coffee with eyes on the clock and shortly after nine was being shown into the private office of the president of the City National bank. Toward the last Mr. Bradley had been her father's only remaining friend.

"It's Joyce," she reminded him, "Joyce Sewell."

"Why, of course! How you've grown, my dear. You're lovely!"

"Mr. Bradley, are bankers like doctors, lawyers, and priests? I mean are they bound to keep a secret if you ask them to?"

"They are and they aren't. A court order can open wide our mouths and our vaults, but short of that we're bound to respect our clients' wishes. Why? Have you a secret you want to deposit?"

"Yes; oh, yes."

He leaned toward her and asked in a whisper, "Is it about the check for ten thousand?" She sank back, her eyes wide, the color draining from her cheeks. He patted her knee reassuringly and chuckled. "There, there, that was a mean trick. Nobody knows but me, my dear. It was I who supplied your name and address."

"Oh!" breathed Joyce. "Please don't ever do a thing like that to me again!"

"You're safe. I doubt whether I'll ever have any other chance. But why the secrecy?"

"Because I'm going away and I don't want anybody to know where." She leaned forward. "Mr. Bradley, you know my father's story, don't you?"

"No man knows it better, and that goes for his one-time lawyers."

"I learned it last night," said Joyce. "I read every letter, every paper, every deed back to the original grant from the king of Spain. Is there any doubt La Barranca belonged to my father?"

"None whatever. He had as clear a title as I have to my hat or my coat or anything else I've paid for in cash."

"Then it's mine now."

"I wish I could answer no to that, but I can't."

"Have you a conscience, Mr. Bradley?" she asked soberly.

"Me?" he exclaimed, puzzled and astonished.

"I was wondering whether it's ever right to—to take your conscience and choke it."

His eyes twinkled violently but he did not laugh. "I see. What's your conscience been telling you to do?"

"Give this money to my stepmother."

"What for?"

"Well, for all she's done—keeping me all these years."

Mr. Bradley's eyes shone with a strange and increasing fire. "Who's been stuffing your head with that?" he demanded. "Anyway, let me put you straight. In the first place step-parents are required by law to do what's been done for you; it's an integral part of their original bargain. In the second Irma's kindness ruined your father by keeping him from going to work. In the third, since she's a do-good-to-others addict, she's had her money's worth out of the two of you ten times over."

"Thank you," she murmured. "You don't know what you've done for me. Now I can do what I've been planning; I can go."

"Where to, Joyce?"

She looked at him steadfastly. "All those years my father stayed here, Mr. Bradley. But La Barranca isn't here; it's in Mexico. I'm going to Mexico."

Joyce laid the warrant, already endorsed, on Mr. Bradley's desk and rose. "I'm leaving the money with you, but you understand I may need a great deal of it any day, don't you?"

"Sit down, Joyce," he said soberly. "Do you know what I've been asking myself?"

"No, sir," said Joyce, sinking to the edge of her chair.

"If I had a girl—your age, your looks, your background—what would I want some other fellow to do in this particular case?" He frowned. "Of course you remember Mexico, but do you remember what happened?"

In Making Vegetable Salads.—To prevent vegetable salads from becoming too watery, dry the vegetables before combining with the salad dressing.

Washing Voile.—Voile frocks will not shrink if you use a tablespoonful of epsom salts to every gallon of water when washing them.

Ten-Minute Sweet.—Line a buttered pie dish with breadcrumbs. Into a pint of milk whisk 2 eggs, 4 tablespoonfuls of sugar and a dash of vanilla essence. Pour over the crumbs and bake for 10 minutes.

Savory Salmon Dish.—Turn out a small tin of salmon, remove skin and bones and flake the fish. Season with pepper and salt. Mix 2 cupfuls of breadcrumbs with 2 ounces of flour, stir in 2 well-beaten eggs and the salmon. Mix well, then form into the shape of a fresh salmon steak. Fry in a little hot fat until brown, turning carefully so that both sides are cooked. Serve garnished with sliced lemon or tomatoes.

For Dry Shoe Polish.—Shoe polish which has become hard and dry should be moistened with a little vinegar.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—fed weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay Heating Expert

Rubbish and Garbage Should Not Be Burned in Your Furnace; They Cause Trouble.

I SHOULD like to caution you against burning garbage and rubbish in the heating plant of your home. Many home-owners are given to this practice, knowing it is a quick and easy way to dispose of garbage, but not realizing fully that it is very harmful to the furnace.

Your furnace was built to burn coal, and coal only. Garbage and rubbish, when burned in it, deposit a thick crust of soot on the burning surfaces, and this soot absorbs much of the heat that should go into your rooms. They also form clinkers which, as you know, cause no end of trouble for you in keeping your fire burning efficiently.

Remember this: A clean furnace, like a clean automobile engine, will give better service and greater comfort.

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm. Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

This Week In
WashingtonBy Ralph E. Church
Illinois Representative in Congress.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20—From the discussions which have taken place during the first week of this Special Session of Congress it is evident that the members have returned from their constituents with a determination to do some independent thinking. There is a noticeable disposition to cast off the apron strings of the White House and put forth a program of their own. In the end the Congress may go along with the President in his proposed program, but it will probably be only after a careful examination of every measure.

The decline in business activity and increase in unemployment, creating this period known as the Roosevelt Recession, have shaken the people's faith in the New Deal policies of the last five years. This growing public sentiment is reflected in the attitude of the Congress.
Democratic Members know that unless there is an upturn in business before the next election they will have to pay the cost in public disfavor at the polls. Judging from the present temper of Congress, anxious to stem the recession tide, the Administration leaders will experience many headaches in trying to keep its overwhelming majority from jumping the traces.

Taxation revision was not included in the President's announced program for the Special Session but it has become the principal topic of discussion. Each day the demand for modification of the un-distributed profits tax grows louder. To this tax, along with the fears and uncertainties created by the Administration's financial policy as a whole, is credited the blame for the falling off of business. As members of Congress insist upon immediate tax revision, the Administration fights to prevent any consideration of the subject at this Session.

The controversial undistributed profits tax was proposed at the suggestion of Prof. Rexford G.
Tugwell, then economic adviser to the President. This particular tax device was emphasized by Prof.
Tugwell in his book, "Industrial Discipline," as a major part of his theory that the Federal Government should reform business and control capital.

Immediately the Roosevelt tax program was hailed by the Democrats as a master political stroke.
It was represented to the people as being a tax on large corporations.
They were told that by this program the New Deal was championing small enterprises against their large rivals—and the small man against the millionaire. The 82 Republicans and 11 Democrats who opposed the measure in the House constituted too small a voice in their efforts to explain to the people that the tax would do the very opposite from what the 253 Democrats said it would accomplish.

As the present decline in business has shown, the New Deal sympathy for the small corporations was founded on political strategy rather than on sound economic principles. The undistributed profits tax has prevented small businesses, which employ most of the wage-earners, from expanding and further developing their activity. It has operated in such a way as to pinch the small business and encourage monopolies. Rather than reaching the reserves of large corporations it has prevented the small corporations from accumulating reserves for reinvestment. In short, the un-distributed profits tax has placed business in a straight jacket and has prevented capital from flowing thru productive channels.

To Stay In The Game

WE MUST KEEP UP WITH OUR NEIGHBORS

The average corn production this year in Illinois is 48 bushels per acre, the highest on record, and indicating advancement in corn growing skill. We can't control what the other fellow does but we can avoid falling behind in our proportionate acre yields by using in 1938.

It is difficult to simplify and put in understandable terms the method by which any tax operates. But somehow it should be made clear to our workers that the undistributed profits tax has been peculiarly onerous on the growing corporations and has played a large part in producing this period of economic recession. For the moment one illustration may suffice.

Treasury statistics for the period of 1931 to 1933 show that in 1931 the smallest corporations withheld 59 per cent of their earnings from dividends for reinvestment purposes, but the larger corporations held out only 5 per cent. In 1933 the percentage was 69 per cent for the smaller and 9 per cent for the larger.
These figures, together with the fact that the tax does not apply to corporation surpluses accumulated prior to 1936, clearly show that it has operated to the advantage of large corporations and precluded any productive expansion by small companies.

A careful study of our economic setup will show that employment opportunity in industry varies directly with the number of businesses. Most of our workers are employed in relatively small companies. It is my contention, therefore, that the small business of the United States should be encouraged and given the opportunity to function.
Our people want permanent jobs at decent wages and not a dole.
Congress should immediately direct its attention to a modification of the undistributed profits tax in order that this may take place.

The Secretary of Treasury has admitted there should be a revision in our taxing method. The President made the same admission in his Message to Congress. They made a mistake in 1936. We should correct it now!

LINCOLN SIGNED FIRST ANNUAL THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

Copr. 1937. The Lincoln National Life Ins. Co.

ALTHOUGH Thanksgiving Day had been celebrated occasionally in America since early Colonial days, it remained for Abraham Lincoln, in 1863, to sign the first national annual Thanksgiving Proclamation. His signing of the document is depicted in the above painting, created for the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company by the nationally-known artist, Dean Cornwell. The scene is historically correct and shows Lincoln in his White House office just after he had completed his signature on the document.

Lincoln's Thanksgiving Proclamation of 1863 marked the beginning of an unbroken series of proclamations by United States presidents, naming the last Thursday in November as a day of national thanksgiving and praise.

THANKSGIVING

"Count your blessings one by one", says an old Gospel hymn. David does this in the 103rd Psalm. As a child of God he is enjoying the divine forgiveness of his Lord. He is certain of God's guidance. He still has friends and loved ones who make life pleasant and bearable. He has enjoyed health and healing from his sicknesses. God has given him good things to eat, providing him with the things that he needs for this life.Each and every one of us must admit that we have also enjoyed these blessings as God's children.Above all, God has given us abundantly of the heavenly manna, which satisfies our souls and fills us with peace and hope and joy. Perchance many of us have not had all that we wanted and desired. Yet must wenot confess that God has daily opened His hand and given us sufficient for the day? Therefore we ought to come into His Presence with THANKSGIVING and recognize His goodness and mercy toward us, which has been new every day.

PALOS PARK

Hi Folks.

How's for some personals of unlucky people caught red handed and with their backs turned?

The first person caught off guard was, bus driver No. 12, entertaining the high school kids by singing and yodeling, also demonstrating high opera. P. S. He likes the gals, but don't rush him girls he is very shy.

Patricia Boner took her victrola apart and when she put it back together again, she had a few extra bolts and parts left over. I wonder how it works now?

Say boys, take a look at the fancy way Raymond Oft has of tying his neckware.

That turnip that Christine Hillig was getting signatures on, for the Palos Juniors initiation, dried up, so the committee, including Henrietta Baker, Alice Crawford and Ruth Vail have decided to let her get all her signatures on an egg. Too bad if it breaks.

When Robert DeNovo is in a hurry, he walks as lightly as a brides first cake.

Palos Juniors will meet in the home of Betty Jane Liszt, 122nd Pl. and 86 Ave., Friday evening. Shirley Haack will be initiated into the club. The initiation committee consists of Betty Jane Liszt, Louise Kriz and Pearl Zaleski.

Get out your rubbers, I don't like the looks of that dark cloud overhead. I think it is going to rain, because Mr. Edw. Cowan took a trip to Lemont last week.

Rosemary Barnes sure can wink those brown eyes into a date.

Don't look now, but don't you like the way Vernon Lamplot combs and parts his hair?

Helen Yankus must be trying to make all the girls jealous when she goes parading around in that new dress.

Donald Gibson is really getting studious, he took an earlier bus to school and intends to do so all year.

How could we do without Sadie Kuipers and her serious moods, Margaret LaBine and her Cowboy, Ruth Vail's giggling, Henrietta Baker's "Hi ya Toots", and Agnes LaBines bashfulness?

I promised Robert Oft I wouldn't say anything about him this week, so just for that I won't tell you how nice he can play his drum. Fooled ya that time, Bob.

Maybe Louise Kuipers or Jane Muhlhousen can explain why girls slip off their shoes in the theaters.

Carl Renfro has been tagged "Kitten Paws", because he does not believe in scratching anyone with those nails of his.

Shirley Haack gets rather excited when she sees her name in the paper. Last week she pushed me against the wall, so I don't know whether I had better mention her for awhile. She gets sorta wild and hard to handle.

Chas. Mullin, one of Orland's population gave me his seat on the bus, so I won't say anything about him this week.

Well good bye till some other time.

"Yours Truly"

"Skeleton in the Closet"

The expression, "a skeleton in the closet," meaning a shameful family secret, may have been suggested by the phrase, "a skeleton at the feast," which means a disagreeable reminder at an inopportune time, notes a writer in the Washington Post. An English story is often told to account for the phrase. It is a moralistic tale concerning a woman who is happy despite her secret worries. And she has a real skeleton in her closet—the skeleton of a former suitor whom her husband killed in a duel. Every night the husband forces her to kiss the skeleton.

A Three-fold Purpose

1. Find all active cases of tuberculosis in every community and treat them; 2. Seek out all persons exposed to tuberculosis and build up their resistance; 3. Educate people in the ways of healthful living. That is the three-fold purpose of the Christmas Seal.

Consider 13 Unlucky
Parisians consider the number 13 so unlucky that they rarely, if ever, use it as a street address, says Collier's Weekly.

America's Most Vital Need

America's most vital need is Christ in the home. Dr. Walter A. Maier of Concordia Seminary, said Sunday in his weekly coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast. Pleading with American parents to lend their moral support to the religious foundation of their families, Dr. Maier warned that unless the home foundations are strengthened, the best program of the State and Church cannot reach their goal.

Dr. Maier commented on the notable trend in scientific circles toward recognizing the preeminence of the home in shaping the attitude and ideals of the children, asserting that not even the classroom or the Sunday School is as decisive in molding adolescent minds.

"We have suffered irreparable loss," Dr. Maier added, "in permitting family prayer and Bible reading to drop into widespread discard. While this age has shown no parallel interest in the externals of the home, it has disastrously neglected the power of family prayer. When this nation had more family altars we had fewer penitentiaries, when more fathers and mothers read the Bible to their children, there were fewer unhappy homes and broken families. When the spiritual life of the home was stronger, the morals of the nation was higher and its vigor and virtue far greater."

Early English Pipes

The first English pipes were made of silver, wood, or porcelain, some of the latter being beautifully painted and now very valuable. Instead of a lighter, the Elizabethan gentleman carried a little pair of bronze or silver tongs for picking a live coal out of the fire to light his pipe. The clay pipe, which soon became the most popular form of all, was introduced from Holland, and the long "church-wardens," were provided in all the London coffee-houses. In the Eighteenth century, says London Answers Magazine, pipe-smoking went completely out of fashion in London society, where the dandies considered snuff-taking much more elegant than smoking. The working classes, however, still remained faithful to their clays.

Washington
Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building

Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Word comes from Rio de Janeiro that the government of Brazil has decided at long last to place its coffee business again on a competitive basis. That is to say, Brazilian coffee once more will be sold in world market conditions. It was 14 years ago that crop control was started, and now it has flopped finally after costing the growers losses accountable in millions and after virtually wrecking some portions of Brazil's foreign trade.

I think it might be said also that the fallacy of the coffee control policy was among the real causes which eventuated in the dictatorship that established itself in Brazil recently. President Getulio Vargas succeeded in placing himself at the head of the nation "indefinitely" and he did so, he said, because of "unrest among the peoples" of the provinces. The first dictatorship in the Western hemisphere, therefore, is a fact.

But to get to the coffee question: it was the determination of the Brazilian leaders that a policy of scarcity would force coffee prices higher in the world market. The state of Sao Paulo initiated the scheme. It failed to work, and its sponsors said the reason was its scope was limited. Thus, it was expanded until the whole nation was embraced. Still, coffee prices did not go high enough and it was then that actual destruction of coffee began. Millions of tons were dumped into the Atlantic ocean and other millions were burned—even as we in this country burned surplus wheat and corn and killed 6,000,000 pigs.

As the destruction continued and the growers found themselves tied tighter with regulations and decrees, there were some increases in prices. But the promised great profits proved to be as illusory as a mirage on the desert.

The whole thing was a boomerang. Not only were the producers in Brazil disillusioned by failure to gain the record returns they had been led to expect, but they found another sad and wholly disadvantageous result staring them in the face. There was some increase in the price—just enough, indeed, to reduce consumption to some extent—for the growers, but with Brazil reducing available supplies others got into the producing business.

Among these new coffee growing areas, Colombia sprang into prominence. Maybe Colombia coffee was not as good as Brazil's, in quality. Maybe it was not quite as acceptable otherwise. But it was cheaper, and it was profitable for Colombia planters to produce. They found a ready sale.

That, however, was not the worst. When other coffee-using nations bought coffee from Colombia and other growing areas, Colombia was able to buy other commodities from the nations buying her coffee. New trade agreements suddenly showed up; new relationships were established, and some of Brazil's former business connections throughout the world are gone with the wind. They may never be re-established.

We, in the United States, ought to give quite a bit of thought to Brazil's coffee experiment for we have had, and are threatening to have more, experiments of a kindred nature. Lessons in crop control are right expensive, and more important is the fact that sooner or later all through history, they have had to be abandoned. And when I refer to crop control, I include all kinds of production control whether agricultural or industrial. Somebody always has to pay dearly for it and usually the cost has been extended. It is reflected in other commodities and in taxes until the actual loss from the experiment is multiplied many times over.

Speaking of congress, the way it has started off makes me think that the extra session was purely a political move. I am quite sure it is going to accomplish some great good like amending the neutrality act. Of course, I suppose I should not be selfish. I ought to consider that the representatives and senators must have time to make speeches for this or that or the other so that their constituencies back home will be duly impressed with their importance. Maybe so! But I repeat that the prospect of anything worth while in either the special session or in the regular session to follow in January is decidedly dull.

Politically, there are several things to watch for in the time that congress will be heave-hoing. One of these definitely now visible is the maneuvering among the Democrats to find out whether President Roosevelt really wants to be a candidate for a third term.

I think I am violating no confidence when I say that a good many of the President's real friends at the Capitol would like to know, and know now, whether he is going after a third term. He hasn't told them in a way that is convincing. He made a speech at the "victory dinner" last March 4 in which he said he had an ambition to leave the President's chair and desk with "the nation intact, a nation at peace, a nation prosperous," etc. He said he planned to do that in January, 1941.

That would seem to be clear enough. Yet, it is amazing how many members of the President's party at the Capitol contend that those remarks did not constitute a final withdrawal. They point as well to the fact that other Presidents, after being re-elected for a second term, have come out flat-footed with their announcements and have told their party, in effect, "Go out and get yourselves a new candidate."

So, I am making a small prediction. There will be plenty of odd maneuvers, unusual situations, that will appear to "just happen" that way. Their purpose will be to bring about a circumstance wherein President Roosevelt can appropriately tell all of those who have so faithfully stood by him that he is, or is not, a candidate for a third term.

The other phase of congressional activity that will prove interesting links in somewhat with the third term question. It involves the personal political fortunes of the representatives and senators who will seek re-election in 1938. It is easy to see how many Democrats, if they know definitely that President Roosevelt will seek a third term, will want to ride again on the New Deal wagon. It is equally easy to understand how some of them, desirous of observing the tradition that no man shall serve more than two terms as President, may want to take a stand opposing the course if President Roosevelt decides that way.

This condition leads far afield. I am informed, for instance that some senators and representatives who have been back home in conservative sections of the country want to dodge further support of the New Deal. This class obviously is biding its time for something to happen to justify a jump. Announcement by Mr. Roosevelt of intention to be a candidate for the third time would provide the reason. The converse is true, as well, for there are those in the house and senate who have found the President's personal popularity at home as great as ever and they are looking for an excuse to sound off that they believe in the Roosevelt policies 100 per cent and want him to have a third term.

The election results in various parts of the country will have some influence on the attitude of representatives and senators as the session continues. Take the vote in Arkansas, for example. Representative Miller won the senatorship in succession to the late Senator Joe Robinson. His victory was over Governor Bailey, who announced that the New Deal was for him and that his defeat would be a slap at President Roosevelt. It is a fact that New Dealers were pulling for him—but Representative Miller was elected.

That is just a sample. The senators and representatives are going to interpret such elections in the light of sentiment in their own bailiwicks. Undoubtedly, some are going to show more spunk in behalf of the New Deal while others have come back determined to foster their ideas of Democratic principles rather than those of New Deal.

This date being what it is, I want to record a tribute in these columns, a tribute to a grand public servant who never has sought publicity for himself nor claimed the credit that is due him. For, it was 40 years ago this week that Col. Edwin A. Halsey, of Tye River, Va., entered the employ of the senate. Now, he occupies the post of secretary of the senate, the highest available outside of senate membership.

The senate never convenes but that I am again impressed with the smoothness of the senate organization under "Eddie" Halsey's direction. I truly believe him to be the best informed man at the Capitol on legislative procedure. As his colored messenger once said to me: "Yessah! De cunnel he suah do know his stuff."

And that goes for Colonel Halsey's political acumen, too. He has performed the chores of the Democratic side of the senate to everybody's satisfaction. I suppose some of the senators who like to be regarded as big shots won't care for this exposure, but I have seen them saved from unnumbered mistakes that would have made them the laughing stock of their constituencies. Day after day, in season and out, "Eddie" Halsey has done more for the Democratic senators than they can ever repay. He ought to be called "the Sage of Tye River," as his counsel warrants that description. The state of Virginia could do itself a good turn if it kept "Eddie" Halsey in mind for something higher.

Lesson for November 28

CHRISTIAN FRUITFULNESS

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Rule of Love.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Loyalty of Love.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What May We Expect to Achieve?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Christians Become Fruitful.

Thanksgiving day has just afforded each one of us a special opportunity to return praise to God for the fruitfulness of America's broad acres. It is appropriate that we think today of the Christian life as manifesting itself in the bearing of fruit.

Christian work of which we spoke last Sunday may (at least in a measure) be imitated, but fruit cannot be imitated. It is the result of life and only those who know the new birth bear the fruit of Christianity.

The chapter before us is a portion of Scripture which has been the peculiar favorite of God's children in all generations. It is at the center of our Lord's words with his disciples immediately before his death on the cross.

Many are the expositions of this passage, but a beautifully simple one which came to the writer from Dr. W. Graham Scroggie is suggested as most helpful.

I. Life and Fruitfulness (vv. 1-8).

Life results in fruit and there can be no true fruit where there is no life. Christ is the vine, the Father is the keeper of the vine. We who are Christ's are the branches abiding in him, that is, living our whole life in and for him in such close union with him that his life as the vine brings forth fruit in us as the branches. That is real Christian living.

But, alas, there are branches that seem to belong to the vine but they lack the one indispensable evidence of life which is the normal bearing of fruit. These the Father must take and cast away to be destroyed. While we must not read into these words more than our Lord intended, let us beware lest we explain away their serious import. These are grave words of warning to false professors of Christianity, but they are not spoken to distress and dishearten true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fruit in the Christian is undoubtedly first of all the fruit of character but that character is also to show in conduct. Note the progress—"fruit" (v. 2), "more fruit" (v. 2), "much fruit" (v. 5). In order to bear more fruit there is need of pruning and cleansing (vv. 2, 3). Pleasant? Not always, but always profitable. Let us thank God for even the pruning knife when its work is needed.

Do not miss the prayer promise in verse 7. It is an unlimited promise with a closely limited condition. Let us meet the condition and claim the promise.

II. Love and Friendship (vv. 9-16).

"This is my commandment that ye love one another." In verse 10 we read that to abide in the love of Christ we must keep his commandments and now we learn that it is his command that we love one another. We are not to await the impulse prompted by the beauty or kindness or propinquity of someone, but we are to love one another. Many a Christian who has obeyed the commandments against stealing, adultery, and blasphemy has never noticed that he is commanded to love.

The joy of Christ was fulfilled on the eve of Calvary by the love of his disciples for one another and for him. He rejoices today when we love the brethren and love him, for thus we enter upon the beautiful relationship of friends.

Dr. Scroggie says, "We may be God's children without being his friends; the one is based on his gift of life to us; the other, upon our offering of love for him. Are you a friend of God? You cannot have God and the world for friends at the same time. The friendship of the world is enmity with God. The world hates Christ, and therefore will not love you if you are like him."

But, oh! the sweet intimacy of fellowship with him. Read verses 14 to 16. Chosen and appointed by him, for "he first loved us," we are not kept in the distant position of servants but are brought into his circle of friends with whom he shares the glorious secrets of his Father, and our Father. It is a great thing to be a Christian, a friend of the Saviour.

Intellect
Every man should use his intellect not as he uses his lamp in the study, only for his own seeing, but as the lighthouse uses its lamps, that those afar off on the sea may see the shining and learn their way.

The Past
The wise man must remember that while he is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future, and that his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not carelessly let die.—Spencer.

Reddy Fox

by Thornton W. Burgess

JUMPER THE HARE CANNOT SLEEP

JUMPER THE HARE was growing thin. Yes, sir, he was growing thin. He never had been very fat, but now he was thinner than ever and getting more so every day. What was making him? Why, just worry. That is all—just worry. Here it was the beautiful spring-time and plenty to eat, yet Jumper was growing thin. Very few people have a good appetite when they are worried. It was that way with Jumper. He just couldn't eat much, and what was almost as bad, he couldn't sleep much. Now eating and sleeping are what make people fat, and whoever cannot eat and cannot sleep is bound to grow thin. And so Jumper grew thinner and thinner, while almost everybody else grew fat.

It was all because of Reddy Fox. Reddy had made up his mind that he was going to catch Jumper the Hare and Jumper knew it. Now Jumper can outrun Reddy Fox, and when it comes to a race he isn't the least bit afraid. But Reddy is sly, very sly. He knew better than to try to catch Jumper by chasing him. He knew that he would have to catch him by surprising him when he was asleep, or by hiding close to some place where Jumper was in the habit of eating.

Jumper knew that, too. Of course he did. He knew just as well as Reddy did that Reddy couldn't catch him in a race. He felt perfectly safe as long as he could see Reddy or knew exactly where he was. But at all other times he was worried. You see, he didn't know but Reddy might jump out from behind any bush or tree, and so he had to be on watch every minute he was awake. That was bad enough, but what was worse was the fact that he didn't dare sleep. Of course, he had to sleep some, but it was in little naps from which the merest rustle of a leaf would wake him all ready to jump and run for his life. Now you know little naps like that give very little rest. And it is dreadful to close your eyes wondering if you will ever open them again. It was no wonder that Jumper grew thin.

It would not have been so bad if Reddy had been content to hunt him in the day time only. But he wasn't. You know Reddy can see in the night. And so he hunted by day or night, whenever he felt like it, and so of course poor Jumper never knew when he might safely sleep. He kept to the deepest part of the Green Forest, hoping that Reddy would not hunt for him there. You know Reddy is more fond of the edge of the Green Forest than he is of the deep, dark lonesome parts. But he had made up his mind to catch Jumper, and so now he followed Jumper to his most lonely hiding places.

It really was quite dreadful for Jumper, and yet it would have been worse for some others had they been in his place. You see, bad as it was, it wasn't quite as bad as things had been in the Great Woods, where Reddy had lived before coming down to the Green Forest. There he had had to watch out every minute for Tufty the Lynx and Howler the Wolf and Mr. Fisher and Mr. Wolverine, which was, of course, much worse than having just Reddy Fox to watch out for. So he had grown used to being always in danger. But since he had come to live in the Green Forest he had felt so much safer and life had been so much easier that now it came very hard to go back to the old way of living.

So Jumper the Hare lost his appetite and couldn't sleep and grew thinner and thinner in the beautiful springtime. And so it was that the fun that his friends and neighbors were having in teasing and making fun of Reddy Fox was really the cause of all the trouble that had come to Jumper the Hare, and he was too polite to tell them about it.

RED SNAPPER IS GREAT DELICACY

Expert Tells How to Cook and Serve This Fish.

By EDITH M. BARBER

"IS STEAK fish the same as red snapper?" asks a reader. "I have heard almost every fish which is large enough to be cut into steaks called by this name. Snapper is often known as redfish in the South, where it is considered a delicacy. Almost any method may be used for cooking it. I have recipes for boiling, baking, and broiling in my files.

In New Orleans the snapper is called, "the king of the fish market." Spices are usually used in its preparation. They are put into the water when the fish is "poached" or a cut, the shape of a letter S, is made on the back and then this is stuffed with thyme, cloves and bayleaf. The body of the fish may then be stuffed with a highly seasoned bread stuffing to which, in season, oysters are often added. It may then be rubbed thoroughly with butter or oil and baked in a hot oven, or it may be baked instead in a creole sauce. The sauce may be made separately and served with the fish.

Creole Sauce.

- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1 chopped onion
- 1 tablespoon flour
- 2 cups tomatoes
- ½ cup chopped mushrooms
- Thyme
- Bayleaf
- Cloves
- Cayenne pepper
- 1 clove garlic, minced

Heat the olive oil and brown the onion in it. Stir in the flour and let brown slightly. Stir in the other ingredients and let simmer half an hour.

Red Dressing.

- ½ cup vinegar
- ½ cup olive oil
- ½ cup catsup
- 1½ tablespoons salt
- 1 teaspoon paprika
- 1 hard-cooked egg (chopped)
- 1 green pepper
- 1 tablespoon chopped chives or onion-tops

Mix the ingredients, add a small piece of ice and beat one minute until thick.

Baked Stuffed Fish.

- 1 three-pound fish
- 3 cups soft bread crumbs
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Pepper
- 4 tablespoons melted butter
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 3 small tomatoes
- 6 onion rings
- Salt, pepper

Split and clean fish. Mix crumbs and seasoning, add 2 tablespoons of melted butter and lemon juice. Mix well and stuff fish with mixture. Sew split edges together and place fish on oven-proof platter. Halve tomatoes, place around fish, sprinkle with salt and pepper and arrange an onion ring on each half. Pour remaining butter over fish and tomatoes. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) about fifteen minutes until fish is tender. Remove from oven and garnish with sliced lemon and parsley.

OTHERS WORTH TRYING

Potato Dumplings.

- 6 medium boiled potatoes
- 2 eggs
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- 1 cup flour
- ½ teaspoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon nutmeg
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- ¼ cup butter

Mash potatoes, add eggs, salt, flour and seasonings and mix well. Knead lightly until smooth. Shape into one long thick roll, cut into pieces one-half to one and a half inches and roll into dumplings the length of a finger. Cook in boiling salted water ten minutes. Drain, pour melted butter over them so they will not stick.

Raisin and Nut Pie.

- 1 cup sugar
 - 1 tablespoon butter
 - 2 eggs
 - ½ teaspoon nutmeg
 - ½ teaspoon cloves
 - 1 teaspoon cinnamon
 - 1 tablespoon vinegar
 - ½ teaspoon salt
 - ½ cup seeded raisins
 - ½ cup chopped nuts
- Cream the sugar and butter and add the beaten egg yolks. Stir in the spices, vinegar, salt, raisins and nuts and cut and fold in the beaten egg whites. Pour into a pie plate lined with pastry and bake at 450 degrees for ten minutes, then at 350 degrees for about 25 minutes longer.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

By Roger B. Whitman

AUTOMATIC HEAT

ONE of the greatest advances in house heating in recent years is in so-called automatic heat; that is, an arrangement by which a house is maintained at an even temperature with no thought or effort by any member of the household. The most important device is a thermostat, which can be applied to a heater of any kind; a heater that burns fuel of any description.

A thermostat is an electric switch that is operated by the temperature of the air that surrounds it. This electric switch controls a mechanism at the heater that opens and closes the dampers, or turns a stoker or an oil burner on and off.

The thermostat is put on a wall five feet from the floor, in a part of the house where the temperature is average for all of the rooms. As the temperature of the air rises to the degree for which the thermostat is set, usually 70 degrees, the switch acts and shuts off the draft, or turns off the motor of an oil burner or stoker. The house then cools off; but when the air around the thermostat has dropped a little, usually by two degrees, the switch again works, and the heater starts up.

With a clock attachment, a thermostat does even more, for it starts the heater early enough in the morning for the house to be warm by getting-up time. Also, at any desired hour in the evening, it will shut off the heater for the night. As showing the watchfulness of a thermostat, I recall an unusually cool spell in summer when on the Fourth of July, we awoke in the morning to find the radiators hot and the chill of the rooms pleasantly taken off.

For many years, both with steam and with hot air, when all heaters were stoked by hand, I had great satisfaction with thermostats. The labor of caring for the fire was reduced to putting on coal and shoveling ashes; there was no running downstairs to turn on the dampers when the house became too cool, or to shut them off when it began to overheat. I found also that in checking a fire at just the right time, there was a distinct saving in fuel.

Later, I used thermostats in connection with a buckwheat stoker and an oil burner. With either of these, house heating is really automatic and it is even more so with gas as the fuel.

A important point in automatic heat is the placing of the thermostat. In one house that I know, there was trouble because the upstairs rooms were never quite warm enough. On looking the place over, I found that the thermostat was on the wall of a small room, so near the boiler that its radiator was the first to heat. As a result, the room warmed up to the temperature at which the thermostat acted, long before the upstairs radiators had had time to heat. This was quickly proved to be the fault by turning off the radiator in the thermostat room. The permanent remedy was to remove the thermostat to the wall of a larger room, where the temperature was more nearly average for the entire house.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT

By JEAN

© By The Associated Newspapers

THERE'S only one thing to do, when you're caught red-handed in the midst of forgetting a date. You simply have to do your best to hide the evidence.

If, for example, it was a dinner date, and the lad turns up just as you are about to pop a potato on the stove of your own little kitchenette, dump everything down the sink, and tell the boy friend that you were just fixing up some face lotion... That you won't be a minute. And then, for land sakes, hurry with your dressing. If it's a steak you're cooking, that's harder. But maybe you can persuade him it was for a dog or a cat or a sick neighbor. Do try. We hate to see these crestfallen lads who lose their assurance because girls forget dates with them.

Some girls, we know, forget dates purposely. But this is a habit we frown upon. If that's the way they feel, they shouldn't make the dates in the first place. We believe in honor among the parasites.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Silk Shades Give a Soft Glow

THERE is subtlety in the light that glows through a silk shade, and many decorators are using them for the room that needs the softness of plaited folds and the mellowness obtained by placing two tones of fabric one over the other.

Two tones of China silk, one to be used for a plain lining and the other for a gathered outside covering will make an attractive shade. Before you buy the material it is best to experiment with samples one over the other trying them both in daylight and over an artificial light. You will also need a roll of silk binding tape matching the top color of the shade. This tape is to wrap the wire frame. And fancy braid either in gold, silver or a harmonizing tone of silk is used to bind the top and bottom of the shade. Use cotton thread to match the outside tone of the silk.

Slip the binding tape off the roll and wrap a rubber band around it as shown here at A. Working from the inside end of the tape wrap the frame as shown at B. The outside layer of silk is put on next. This is gathered both top and bottom and pinned to the wire covering as at C and D so that it is stretched quite tight. Joinings in the outside covering need not be sewed but may be hidden under the folds. This material is sewed in place as at E.

Next, cut a straight strip for the lining and fit it around the outside of the frame as shown here at F. Trim the joining allowing a seam as shown at G. Sew to the frame at the bottom as at H. Trim quite close at the bottom. Turn lining to inside as at I. Slip stitch the joining. Turn in raw edges at top and whip around top of frame. Pin the binding around and then sew it with stitches buried in the mesh of the braid.

Mrs. Omar Ebenhack president of the club, presided at the business meeting which was held at 1:30 o'clock, and at two o'clock the program was presented. This part of the meeting opened in the usual manner, the entire group singing our National Anthem, and repeating the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag. After a few words of welcome Mrs. Ebenhack turned the meeting over to Mrs. Charles Crist, program chairman, who in turn presented Mrs. August Pankin, music chairman. Mrs. Pankin introduced Mrs. Paul Grundman, director of the Beverly Hills Women's Club Chorus who gave a most interesting lecture on "Women's Influence in Music." Mrs. Grundman told how music had been brought down through the ages from the beginning of time, but that not until after the birth of Christ did it actually begin to develop. She also brought to light many interesting facts about the wives of our great musicians and related how important a part some had played in the lives of their musical husbands, most of them being a great source of inspiration. The chorus sang three groups of songs—twelve songs in all. These were beautifully rendered, as were the two numbers played by Jeanette Moysey on her violin, and the Tinley Park Women's Club, thanks the Beverly Hills Women's Club for this musical treat. It was greatly appreciated by all. Music is not only a body healer, it is a mind regulator. Music arouses, disciplines, and controls our emotions.

Mrs. Ewing extended greetings from the Blue Island Women's Club.

Mrs. Harrop, third district Art chairman, made a humorous plea for all those who were interested in art to make, carve, draw or paint something for the coming art exhibit. Mrs. I. Stover is our club art chairman. Contact her learn more about this exhibit. At the conclusion of the meeting, tea was served by the hostesses of the day: Mrs. Badwin, Combs, Ruppert, Nielsen, and Standlee. Our membership chairman, Mrs. Roy Hannum reported the following new members:

Mrs. Cross, Mrs. Curlin, Mrs. DeVoi, Mrs. Fay and Mrs. Zobeck. An invitation is extended to all women of Tinley Park interested in the work of the club, to become members.

The Brewers' Code of Practice

The Brewing Industry of the United States, custodian of an art and science practiced since the beginning of recorded history, supplies a mild beverage to the major part of our population. Beer is the bulwark of moderation and sobriety. The industry recognizes its direct responsibility to itself and to the nation to conduct its operations in accord with the desires and conscience of the American public. Members of the United Brewers Industrial Foundation, in convention assembled, representing nearly half the production of beer and ale in the United States, mutually and individually pledge themselves to the following Code of Practice:

WE PLEDGE ourselves, as citizens and as business men, to conduct our business in conformity with established laws in co-operation with the authorities.

WE PLEDGE ourselves as scientific brewers to maintain exacting high standards in the brewing and packaging of beer and ale.

WE PLEDGE ourselves, with all thoughtful citizens, to the promotion of practical moderation and sobriety.

WE PLEDGE our support to the duly constituted authorities for the elimination of anti-social conditions wherever they may surround the sale of beer to the consumer.

WE PLEDGE ourselves morally to support and encourage the great body of retailers who sell beer as law-abiding citizens and who operate legal, respectable premises.

WE PLEDGE ourselves to co-operate with the duly constituted authorities to prevent beer sales to minors, or to persons who have drunk to excess.

WE PLEDGE ourselves to truth in the advertising of beer.

WE PLEDGE ourselves faithfully to observe the provisions of this Code of Practice, convinced that beer is the nation's bulwark of moderation and sobriety.

The Concord Grape

The grapes from which the Concord descended were in this country when it was discovered. In Concord, Mass., is a stone bearing the following inscription: "Ephraim Wales Bull planted seeds of a wild Labrusca Grape found growing on this hillside, which after three generations, through his work and wisdom, became in this garden in September, 1848, the Concord Grape."

Difference in Counsel

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer; for there is no such remedy against flattery of a man's self as the liberty of a friend.

SAVE and SACK the BEANS

WHILE chopping and storing the hay, the new Letz mill with grain separator sacks the beans. Saving high priced beans soon pays for a Letz—the surest money maker for any livestock farm.

Says Letz user, Lee Chatham, Danville, Indiana, "We chopped and blew into the mow 72 acres of soybean hay. We sacked 1,000 bushels of Manchou beans, keeping some for seed, recleaning and selling the rest for $1.25 per bushel. These beans brought us in over $1000.00."

Come in and investigate this wonderful machine. For most farmers feeding beef or dairy cattle, lambs or hogs, the Letz mill saves its cost and more the first season used. Let us demonstrate one for you.
